PERSONA

Anya

Russian as a language of culture

> For Anya, passing on Russian means preserving a language of culture, emotion and intimacy.

> "I want Russian to remain a language of culture, emotion and thought.

Who she is

Anya wants to pass on a rich, living and culturally layered form of Russian. For her, the goal goes beyond speaking at home: she wants her child to understand humour, stories, books and part of her inner world.

She looks for environments that are stimulating, warm and demanding at the same time, enriching the language without reducing it to a school exercise.

She accepts a degree of structure, but only when it supports a deeper relationship with the language and culture.

Desired depth of transmission	High
Need for structure	Medium
Reliance on the ecosystem	Medium
Tolerance for complexity	Medium
Emotional weight of transmission	High

Objectives

- Preserve rich and expressive Russian
- Give access to books, stories and humour
- Prevent Russian from becoming purely functional
- Connect language, culture and identity

Habits

- Speaks Russian at home
- Selects high-quality cultural content
- Looks for environments that genuinely stimulate the child
- Filters options according to values and atmosphere

Deep motivations

- Pass on an intimate part of herself
- Preserve a deep relationship with the culture
- Enrich thought and self-expression
- Prevent the language from becoming impoverished

Frustrations

- Options can be too academic or too superficial
- Few spaces combine warmth with intellectual depth
- Fear of putting pressure on the child
- Difficulty finding genuine cultural continuity

What would encourage adoption

- Well-curated cultural activities
- Clear indicators of educational quality
- A community that shares her values
- Formats that enrich the language in depth