PERSONA

Nina

The everyday connection

For Nina, passing on Russian means first and foremost keeping it alive through conversations, routines and the small moments of everyday life.

> I want Russian to be part of everyday life without becoming a burden.

Who she is

Above all, Nina wants Russian to remain alive in everyday life. For her, transmission happens through conversations, family routines and relationships with relatives.

She looks for simple, warm and realistic solutions that can fit into family life without creating an excessive additional burden.

She does not necessarily expect high academic performance: her main objective is to preserve a living relationship with the language and culture.

Desired depth of transmission	High
Need for structure	Low to medium
Reliance on the ecosystem	Medium
Tolerance for complexity	Low
Emotional weight of transmission	High

Objectives

- Keep Russian present in everyday life
- Maintain ties with the family
- Build a natural familiarity with the language
- Bring culture into everyday routines

Habits

- Speaks Russian at home
- Looks for activities that are easy to fit in
- Relies on word of mouth
- Watches whether the child enjoys it

Deep motivations

- Preserve a living connection
- Prevent the gradual loss of the language
- Pass on a part of herself
- Create continuity across the family

Frustrations

- Finding the right option often takes too much searching
- Options can feel too demanding or too school-like
- There is not enough time
- The available offer is not always clear

What would encourage adoption

- Simple, nearby solutions
- Reliable recommendations
- A warm atmosphere
- An experience that is easy to set up